

COUNTRY BRIEFING
AUGUST 2024

Croatia

INTRODUCTION

The Statelessness Index (<https://index.statelessness.eu/>) is an online comparative tool that assesses European countries' law, policy and practice on the protection of stateless people and the prevention and reduction of statelessness against international norms and good practice. The Index was developed and is maintained by the European Network on Statelessness \(ENS\),¹ a civil society alliance of over 180 organisations and individuals in 41 countries working to promote the right to a nationality and ensure that stateless people in Europe access their rights.

ENS worked with its members to research and compile comparative information on statelessness in Croatia.² This briefing summarises the findings on how Croatian law, policy and practice performs against international norms and good practice on the protection of stateless people and the prevention and reduction of statelessness. It covers five thematic areas – International and Regional Instruments, Stateless Population Data, Statelessness Determination and Status, Detention, and Prevention and Reduction – and makes a series of recommendations to the Croatian Government for reform in priority areas.

To be stateless is not to be considered as a national by any State under the operation of its law. It is a legal anomaly that prevents more than 10 million people around the world - and more than half a million in Europe - from accessing fundamental civil, political, economic, cultural, and social rights.

INTERNATIONAL AND REGIONAL INSTRUMENTS

Different international and regional treaties provide for the protection of stateless people and the prevention and reduction of statelessness.

Croatia is State Party to two of the core statelessness instruments: the 1954 Convention Relating to the Status of Stateless Persons and the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness. It did not enter any reservations to the Conventions, and both have direct effect in domestic law.

Croatia has signed but not acceded to the European Convention on Nationality, and it is not State party to the Council of Europe Convention on the Avoidance of Statelessness in Relation to State Succession. Croatia is party to all other relevant international and regional instruments, except for the Convention on the Rights of Migrant Workers and their Families.

The Government of Croatia should consider acceding to the Council of Europe Convention on the avoidance of statelessness in relation to State succession, the European Convention on Nationality, and the Convention on the Rights of Migrant Workers and their Families.

STATELESS POPULATION DATA

States should collect reliable quantitative and qualitative data on statelessness and adopt and strengthen measures to count stateless people on their territory.³ The availability of reliable data is linked to whether procedures to identify and determine statelessness exist. Identification of stateless people remains the first step to protecting their rights, but also leads to a better understanding of the challenges that need to be addressed.

Some limited data and estimates are available for the stateless population in Croatia. The last census in 2021 included the categories 'stateless' and 'unknown citizenship' disaggregated by place of residence, but these categories were not defined in the census methodology. Some limited data on stateless asylum seekers is published by the Croatian authorities. UNHCR has carried out mapping studies of statelessness in Croatia and as of mid-2023 estimates the population under its statelessness mandate in the country to number 733 people.⁴ Studies have also estimated that between 500-1500 Romani people in Croatia are stateless or at risk of statelessness. No information is published on the number of stateless people held or released from immigration detention in Croatia.

The Government of Croatia should take concrete steps to improve the recording of statelessness, including by harmonising and disaggregating data on stateless people in Croatia. This should extend to the recording and publicising of data on stateless people in detention.

The Government of Croatia should consider carrying out a comprehensive exercise to accurately map the stateless population in Croatia and build the capacity of officials to accurately identify and record statelessness.

STATELESSNESS DETERMINATION AND STATUS

To be able to provide the protection and rights enshrined in the 1954 Convention, including a residence permit and the right to work, study and facilitated naturalisation, State Parties need to be able to identify stateless people on their territory. UNHCR recommends that this is best fulfilled through a dedicated statelessness determination procedure.⁵

There is a definition of a stateless person in Croatian law, but there is no dedicated procedure to determine statelessness and grant stateless people the rights and protection they are due under the 1954 Convention. Statelessness may be identified and assessed on an ad hoc basis during asylum, residence permit, or naturalisation applications, but there is no guidance for decision-makers, nor information for applicants on how to make a claim of statelessness.

No rights are granted to stateless people based on statelessness, except for the right to a travel document. Other rights are granted depending on the type of residence permit held. Under the Foreigners Act, holders of temporary residence on humanitarian grounds are entitled to education, vocational training, and have the right to work. The law also facilitates access to long-term or permanent residence for stateless people by removing the requirement to present a valid travel document.

Croatia has implemented the EU Temporary Protection Directive and grants temporary protection to some stateless people fleeing the war in Ukraine (those who benefitted from international or equivalent national protection in Ukraine, and their family members if they resided in Ukraine, or who held a permanent residence permit and cannot return to their country of origin) but this leaves protection gaps for some stateless populations from Ukraine.

The Croatian Government should introduce a dedicated statelessness determination procedure and protection status in line with UNHCR guidance and good practice, to fulfil its obligations to stateless people under the 1954 Convention. It should also ensure that stateless people have access to the full range of rights protected under the 1954 Convention. It should further ensure that all stateless people fleeing the war in Ukraine can access adequate protection.

DETENTION

Stateless people face a heightened risk of arbitrary detention particularly where procedural safeguards to identify and determine statelessness and related barriers to removal are lacking.⁶

There are limited protections against the arbitrary detention of stateless people in Croatia. A proposed country of removal must be identified in return decisions, and the law establishes that detention for the purposes of removal can only take place if removal cannot be ensured through more lenient measures. There is also a clear obligation on authorities to release a person when there is no reasonable prospect of removal. However, Croatian law does not consider statelessness as a factor increasing vulnerability and procedural safeguards are limited. NGOs have reported widespread detention at the border without access to basic facilities and routes to protection; and asylum seekers are frequently arrested and detained without due process, individual assessments, or the right to appeal. People released from detention should be issued with a temporary identity card but have very limited rights, and the duration of temporary documents varies. The law does not protect people from re-detention and there are no provisions to ensure cumulative time spent in detention counts towards the maximum time limit.

The Croatian Government should take steps to protect stateless people from arbitrary detention by introducing a statelessness determination procedure and protection status, as well as embedding consideration of statelessness as a juridically relevant fact in all decisions to detain.

PREVENTION AND REDUCTION

As State party to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness, Croatia has obligations to prevent and reduce statelessness on its territory.

There is no facilitated route to naturalisation for stateless people in Croatia, and standard eligibility requirements include at least eight years' continuous permanent residence, as well as language and integration tests. There are some legal safeguards to prevent and reduce statelessness in Croatia, but these are not aligned with international law and there are gaps in both law and practice. Although there is a partial safeguard to prevent statelessness for some children born in Croatia, it is not automatic, and the authorities do not apply it in practice. There are also partial safeguards to prevent statelessness in the case of foundlings, children born abroad, and in adoption proceedings.

By law, all children born in Croatia are registered at birth, but there are discriminatory practices that create obstacles for some children. If the parents are undocumented, birth certificates will be issued but not completed. If a child is born outside of hospital and the parents do not register the child within 15 days, the Croatian Institute for Social Work may decide to issue a supervision order. If the child does not fulfil the conditions outlined in the Citizenship Act (including that at least one parent is a Croatian citizen), their nationality will not be determined and the 'citizenship' field is left blank, or the child will be recorded as having the same presumed nationality as the parents, if it is known.

The Croatian Government has made past commitments to addressing statelessness through its National Roma Inclusion Strategy 2013-2020 and initiatives such as the Zagreb Declaration, but little recent progress or concrete action has been taken. The National Plan for Roma Inclusion for 2021-2027 does not include any measures on prevention and reduction of statelessness among the Romani population.

There are no provisions for the deprivation of Croatian citizenship that permit statelessness, but some situations may result in statelessness, and, in practice, some cases have been reported that resulted in statelessness. There are no safeguards to prevent derivative loss of nationality.

The Croatian Government should ensure that stateless people have access to a facilitated path to naturalisation, in line with the 1954 Convention and are exempted from requirements such as language and integration tests.

The Croatian Government should introduce and implement a full safeguard to ensure that all children born in Croatia who would otherwise be stateless automatically acquire Croatian citizenship, and take concrete action to remove all practical barriers to birth registration regardless of the parents' status or documentation.

The Croatian Government should protect and advance the rights of minorities, in particular by tackling antigypsyism and ensuring the swift resolution of remaining issues with legal status, including to eliminate the risk of statelessness.

The Croatian Government should ensure that deprivation of nationality does not result in statelessness.

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

The Government of Croatia should:

- Consider acceding to the Council of Europe Convention on the Avoidance of Statelessness in Relation to State Succession and the European Convention on Nationality.
- Take concrete steps to improve the recording of statelessness, including by harmonising and disaggregating data on stateless people in Croatia. This should extend to the recording and publicising of data on stateless people in detention.
- Consider carrying out a comprehensive exercise to accurately map the stateless population in Croatia and build the capacity of officials to accurately identify and record statelessness.
- Introduce a dedicated statelessness determination procedure and protection status in line with UNHCR guidance and good practice, to fulfil its obligations to stateless people under the 1954 Convention. Ensure that stateless people have access to the full range of rights protected under the 1954 Convention.
- Ensure access to adequate protection for all stateless people fleeing Ukraine.
- Take steps to protect stateless people from arbitrary detention by introducing a statelessness determination procedure and protection status, as well as embedding consideration of statelessness as a juridically relevant fact in all decisions to detain.
- Ensure that stateless people have access to a facilitated path to naturalisation, in line with the 1954 Convention, and are exempted from requirements such as language and integration tests.
- Introduce and implement a full safeguard to ensure that all children born in Croatia who would otherwise be stateless automatically acquire Croatian citizenship, and take concrete action to remove all practical barriers to birth registration regardless of the parents' status or documentation.
- Protect and advance the rights of minorities, in particular by tackling antigypsyism and ensuring the swift resolution of remaining issues with legal status, including to eliminate the risk of statelessness.
- Ensure that deprivation of nationality does not result in statelessness.
